TOM O'HANLON:

Lehman is part of the City University of New York. We offer nearly 100 bachelor's and master's degree programs in the liberal arts and sciences and professional studies.

00:10

RUBY PHILLIPS:

We attract students from the New York City metropolitan area, especially the Bronx and Westchester. The first meetings of the United Nations were held on our campus and, even now, Lehman is like a mini U.N., with students from 90 countries around the world.

00:24

TOM O'HANLON:

Lehman students attend classes full-time, part-time, days, evenings, weekends -- whatever works best for them. The College is 100-percent committed to our students' success in the work-world after they graduate. So we encourage students to apply for internships, connect with successful alumni, and polish up their interviewing skills...and we have a career services office to help make those arrangements.

RUBY PHILLIPS:

Lehman has a great faculty. Classes are smaller than you might expect: on average, no more than 18 students. In the sciences especially, Lehman students work on research projects with our faculty. Furthermore, there are many new media opportunities in animation, broadcast, and print journalism.

TOM O'HANLON:

If you want to use a fast computer with the latest software and Internet access, just show your student I.D. at the computer center. Our Library also has lots of electronic bells and whistles to help you with your research and writing.

01:20

RUBY PHILLIPS:

If you like to work out, swim, lift weights, play tennis, or shoot some hoops, check out our sports complex, The APEX.

01:27

TOM O'HANLON:

The campus has its own Art Gallery,
Greenhouse, theatres, cafeterias -- and so much more that you'll just have to visit if you want to see it all.
